QUESTION 3

The Unicorn was a trawler owned by the State Fishing Enterprise of Phoenicia, a sovereign State, and was on the high seas while the Dolphin, one of its boats, was fishing at sea about 110 nautical miles off the Malaysian coast, closely watched by the KD Sri Putra, a frigate of the Royal Malaysian Navy. The Dolphin then set off, shadowed by the KD Sri Putra, to the place where the Unicorn was waiting and transshipped the cargo onto the Unicorn. The KD Sri Putra signaled to the Unicorn to stop in order to do boarding and searching. Neglecting the order, the Unicorn sped up further to the open sea pursued by the KD Sri Putra. Only with the use of guns the KD Sri Putra was able to arrest the Unicorn, which was later taken to Port Klang. The case was brought before the Magistrate Court, which decided to imprison the crew, all of whom were Phoenician nationals, and forfeit the vessel.

The Government of Phoenicia objected to the arrest on the grounds that the Unicorn had never been within Malaysian waters and never violated Malaysian laws, that it was taking specimen of fishes only for research purposes, and that the use of guns was not necessary and unreasonable and thus in breach of the lawful exercise of the right of hot pursuit. They further argued that the Malaysian court had no jurisdiction as the Unicorn was a government-owned vessel protected by immunity and that the imprisonment of the crew and the forfeiture of the vessel were contrary to the Fisheries Act 1985.

Advise the Attorney-General's Chamber of Malaysia.
